When the venerable Thomas Ritchie, the most laborious, sagacious, and, in many respects, the most successful editor who ever lived in this country-a grand, noble soul likewise, as we say with honest reverence whenever we mention his honorable name-retired from the control of the Richmond Enquirer, and reluctantly accepted the control of an "organ" in Washington, he said, at a public dianer given in his honor, that there were, on the books of the Enquirer, unpaid debts amounting to the enormous aggregate of two hundred thousand dollars; of which, if he had even one-fourth, he might be able to spend the declining years of a hard working life in the competent repose he so much needed. Such is a little scrap of history regarding the ablest paper ever published in Virginiathe one of widest influence and of most diffused eneulation. Such is the story of a past editor. There is published, every morning, at the head of the editorial columns of the Richmond Whig-a paper considered, among the craft, inancially, the best managed political paper ever published in Richmond-a statement, designed as just praise of that journal as an lars. Now, we undertake to say that the same amount of capital, energy and talent employed in no other business in Richmond would have been content to divide among three proprietors so small a sum.

In every direction, throughout the South especially, we hear of newspapers suspending, of disgusted proprietors selling out, of failure, in a word.

There is no secret in any of this. The cause lies on the surface. It is not want of talent for we can lay our hand on a dozen papers in Virginia which burned swiftly out in the last ten years, althought conducted by some of the we say it who should not - are the most con- apply to liauously industrious men who lead professional lives. It is simply and exclusively bad debts.

The farmer who would laugh in our face, if we asked him to consign crop after crop to us, although we rendered him no 'account sales' of any-the grocer who would laugh in our face, if we desired him to continue this year to and us supplies, although we said nothing about paying for last year's-the shoemaker who would laugh in our face, if we suggested boots for the winter of '66, while those we were during the winter of '65 were unraid for-all consider that it savors of extortion, if not of absolute impertinence, if a publisher declines to continue to furnish his wares and his services when his past bills are unsettled. But, says an indignant correspondent, "I think it would not have embarassed your finandes or consumed your profits to have continued the paper for a month or two, until I should have the opportunity of sending or delivering m person my subscription. Pelectly true; but suppose a thousand men tenson the same way, and obtain the same indalgence, and five hundred deceived us en tirely, as they would, we should lose four thousand dollars a year as long as we continuel the game. Now, we confidently assure our friends that we cannot afford that quite. le is a trifling matter in the case of each individual, truly; and, therefore, we think there is less excuse in the individual neglect of it. And here we beg, as this is a free talk, to say a word as to the general topic of taking a newspaper. We have known men who could and afford to take a copy of this paper, costing drams a day, costing them three dollars a week, and spend as much more in eigars!

Do we do these men any injustice in affirmmy that this is a very contemptible piece of selfishness? Their wives and daughters do not drink whiskey and smoke eigars, but they do desire to read a daily paper, to learn what the world is doing, to read what the world is hinking, to keep abreast of the improvements and discoveries of the times, to know the ten housand things that make a good newspaper. Their pleasures are not so varied as yours, their office. sources of enjoyment are more limited, and yet I may happen, and often does happen, that their keen zest for improvement and susceptibility of it vastly exceed yours. Is it fair or to anly to indulge yourself so much, and them

Your boys go to school and, in the play sround or on the street, are put to the blush Pecause of their ignorance of current public or events which their playmates, the children wiser and more affectionate parents, are athughly conversant with. Is this doing aght by your boys? We return to our theme to say, finally, plan we have adopted of cutting off elinquent subscribers, or those in arrears, has GARDEN SEEDS, aren resolved on, solely under the conviction hat in no other way can the paper support sproprietors. If our triends in arrears doubt his let them call on us, and we will permit hem to run the machine for a while to satisfy

We hope, then, that each subscriber will make an effort to pay this small debt in time. The next six months will decide the fate of the Republic-every citizen should inform himself of the progress of the revolution, and that cannot be done without a daily paper. This paper is one of the dailies that cannot be the shed gratuitously, and, on sober second BRUISES, thought, none of its readers will conclude that it should be.
